Trial of the Templars

On October 13, 1307, French King Philip IV ordered the arrest of every Templar in France and seized the order's property.

Who were the Templars?
This order of crusading knights has long been the subject of fascination (and no small number of conspiracy theories).

What was Philip's problem with the Templars?
Short answer? Philip was chronically broke and the Templars were history's first transnational financial services company.

Did Philip try that with anyone else?
Most definitely. He also expelled all the Jews from France and, certainly not coincidentally, seized all of their property.

Why was Philip so short on cash?
He had a tendency to go to war with anyone he perceived as less holy than himself. As he considered himself holier than the pope, this worked out to many, many wars.

Weren't the Templars in that Dan

Rescued!

October 13 marks the 10th anniversary of the rescue of 33 workers from a gold and copper mine in Chile. Trapped underground for more than two months, the men endured harsh conditions, including limited food and sweltering heat. Their rescue—which was made possible, in part, by a custom-made capsule know as the Fenix 2—was hailed as a “miracle.” We take a closer look at that event as well as other dramatic tales of endurance and rescue.
